TO HIS DEAD FATHER

A Son Who Like Many Others Did Not Realize Until Too
Late.

(This letter appeared in Commerce and Finance, a New York publication, with the statement that it was designed to promote a better understanding between living fathers and their sons.)

Dear Dad: I am writing this to you, though you have been dead thirty years.

I feel I must say some things to you, things I didn't know when I was a boy in your house, and things I was too stupid to say.

It is only now, after passing through the long, hard school of years; only now, when my own hair is gray, that I understand how you felt.

I must have been a bitter trial to you. I believed my own petty wisdom, and I know how ridiculous it was, compared to that calm, ripe, wholesome wisdom of yours.

Most of all, I want to confess my worst sin against you. It was the feeling I had that you "did not understand."

When I look back over it now, I know that you did understand. You understand me better than I did myself. Your wisdom flowed around me like the ocean around an island.

And how patient you were with me! How full of long-suffering and kindness!

And how pathetic, it now comes home to me, were your efforts to get close to me, to win my confidence, to be my pal!

I wouldn't let you. I couldn't.
What was it that held me aloof? I didn't know. But it is tragic—that wall that rises between a boy and his father, and their frantic attempts to see through it and climb over it.

I wish you were here now, across the table from me, just for an hour, so that I could tell you how there's no wall any more; I understand you now, dad, and dad, how I love you, and wish I could go back and be your boy again!

I know now how I could make you happy every day. I know how you felt.

It took a good many years for this prodigal son—and all sons are in a measure prodigal—to come to himself. I've come! I see it all now.

I know what a rich and priceless thing, and one least understood, is that mighty love and tenderness and craving to help which a father feels toward his boy. For I have a boy of my own.

And it is he that makes me want to go back to you, get down on my knees to you and ask you to hear me, dad, and believe me.

GET YOUR GEESE

And in That Way Get Rid of the Dandelion Pest on Your Premises.

Of course your lawn is covered with the pretty yet not wanted dandelion this spring—if you so dare to call this unmentionable weather—and like the rest of the householders you would like to have a remedy to get rid of them. Well—here's a new one proposed by a local nature sharp, who now informs a waiting world that the old fashioned geese will do the work. All that one has to do is to turn a goose, or a couple of geese, loose on the premises—and the problem is solved.

All right.

Then, after the geese have whetted their appetites with a few dozen dan-delions, they will set to and enjoy a complete repast of everything else on the ranch, from tulips to asparagus—and will also chase all the kids in the neighborhood clear off the reservation.

Nature takes care of pests and stuff like that. Sheep, for instance, are remarkably efficient in trimming the fairway on a golf course—but they make very disagreeable hazards, and have had to be abandoned.

Cows are lovely for shoving the grass from golf fields, yet Bill Beattie out on the Highland links one day drove a ball among a bevy of bovines and now is so moo-shy that a cow scares him to death.

Thus with the geese versus the dandelions.

We would rather have the dan-delions—because, at any rate, they don't peck at you, nor him!

In a recent speech in the senate, Senator Trammell of Florida got his history all mixed up when he referred to "Nero's wife fiddling while Rome burned." But there are some folks who seem to blame the women for everything.—Clinton County Democrat.

No names are mentioned, says the Excelsior Springs Call, but the residents of Old Orchard street publish a notice warning a certain young man who drives a car with a purple body and red wheels, that he will be arrested for speeding if he comes tearing down that street again.
